

ABSTRACT

The invention relates to a method of cutting a plastic functional film, in particular a protective film, which has been applied to a hard substrate (6), such as a glass sheet. The invention is characterised in that the film is cut using an ultrasound 5 cutting device having characteristics and parameters which are selected such that the cut is only made through the thickness of the functional film, leaving the underlying substrate intact.